COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

New York Dry Goods Market.

The continuiton of the heated term which commenced week before last, had the effect of wilting prices of atmost everything but domestic cottons; and the whole market for dry goods sympathized with sheetings and shirtings, and maintained prices in a very remarkable manner. The transactions were not large; but the cheapness of money and the prospects of the fall business give an extraordinary firmness of tone to the whole market. Neither manufacturers nor jobbers appear to anticipate any decline in prices; and where such a feeling is shown, in common with both producers and consumers, there is little likelihood of any decline taking place. There is nothing in the present condition of our national finances, nor in the reports of the harvests from the great grain-producing region of the West, to cast a shadow upon the business prospects of the immediate future. In some styles of goods there has been a slight advance established, but in most articles prices have been evenly maintained.

In brown sheetings and shirtings vance established, our in most articles prices have been evenly maintained. In brown sheetings and shirtings there has not been quite so much activity as in the previous week; but prices have improved about 1/2 cent a yard in standard makes. In bleached goods the advance is fully maintained, and jobbers are quietly adding to their Fall trade.

Drills are in better demand, while the stocks in first hands have considera-bly diminished. Canton Flannels are more inquired for, and the popular makes are held at higher rates. Corse leans are without material change, an the market is well supplied. are in better demand, but there is n marked change of prices. Denims and cottonades are in good demand and pri ces are a shade higher and firmer. In printing-cloths there have been ame considerable transactions, and same considerable transactions, and prices are firm, though the market for gray goods is less active than it was last week. last week.

In prints there is a firm demand for medium and light effects, considering the season; but dark styles are not yet in full supply, and prices are not settled. In the new styles for the Fall trade there is an advance of about half DEO, EDWARDS, B. B. STONE, MARO, F. STONE a cent a yard. Ginghams remain in active without any material change of Rolled inconets are in good demand Cambrics, except for the better quali-ties, are quite inactive.

Italian cloths are moderately active Italian cloths are moderately active, the demand coming mostly from the large clothing houses; but prices are without decided change. For cloths and over-coatings there is an increased demand, and both buyers and sellers appear to have greater confidence in the market, but prices are without material change. But there is more business doing in cassimeres and satinets, with a slight improvement in prices; the new styles of fancy cassimeres are very attractive and meet a ready market. The better qualities of satinets sell freely, but the lower grades are heavy.

sell freely, but the lower grades are heavy.

Kentucky jeans are in moderate demand for the better qualities, but inferior grades are in small request.

In foreign goods there is but little doing. The season is early for the opening of Fall styles, and the importations, except in plain merinos, is small. For the next three or four weeks there will be a constantly improving increase in the amount and quality of dry goods importations.
